There is a forest in Japan where people go to commit suicide. I've seen videos where is says that the people are drawn to it and then when they get in the woods they feel compelled to kill themselves. It's spooky and incredibly sad.

CT native here. Never been but have heard stories from those who have. The one that stands out the most is a former teacher who found the foundations of the old town or buildings. He said as soon as he stepped into the area the whole woods went unusually silent. No sound of bugs, animals or wind through the trees.

Re: A Forest so evil, it's illegal to enter

I want to get this off my chest. I lived it.

Around 1968 or so my father and his new bride, my mother had died, bought a brand new house in Great Kills, Staten Island(a borough of NYC). It was mostly woods and farms back then. I was 9 years old.

The neighborhood grew very fast. Cops, firemen, city workers. Still semi rural but not for long. I left when I was 18 for the military and never looked back.

Here is what happened in the course of those 9 years on this block and about a 2 mile radius and then some:

-One cop brought his buddy home. They got drunk. Cop wakes from his stupor and shoots and kills his buddy.

-Couple of doors down one city worker goes to federal Jail for some crime(reason omitted), makes mafia buddies there and takes over as manager of a nite club. Son has a romance with one the mob wives and gets his face shot off.

-Across the street, sexy Italian wife and loon is luring husbands into the woods for some fun. Scandal, divorce, they move away.

-Two husbands decide to quit their city jobs and join a motorcycle gang. One wife dies of cancer about a year later.

-About 2 blocks away man and wife(both married) just not to each other are found dead in the guy's car in the morning partly dressed. The cars windows were rolled up, carbon monoxide poisoning.

-One kid decides that chewing on a live wire is a good idea and gets electrocuted and permanently disfigured.

-Our house straddled the border of 2 parishes. About 3 years ago I get a call asking if I knew anything about the pedophile priests that were there back then, this from a lawyer.

-One kid around the corner was selling drugs for another group of guys. His body was found burnt, stabbed and tossed into a swamp.

-A girl was abducted and raped. The boyfriend got a Federal job and ended up in Federal Prison for fraud.

-I witnessed an older lady of someone I knew hit and killed by a garbage truck.

-Down the block a guy's car got a flat on the Garden State Pkwy and was killed while changing tire.

-The nicest guy you could ever meet was working at a gas station a couple of blocks away. Someone drop one of those drop lights and the repair bay went up in flames, killing wife of owner, burning the owner, place burnt to the ground. The guy became a firemen, died in a fire on the job. The woods behind his house became a park, named after him.

-A girl, adopted and a little unstable, ran away from home, was found in Chicago, murdered.

-A guy was decapitated while racing down the block.

-A guy went out in the morning for work, had a flat, they came up from behind him and shot him in the head.

-A guy took a job working the building of the Alaska pipeline. Came home, was playing baseball, slid into home plate, broke his neck and died.

Not to mention the numerous 9-11 deaths of neighbors later on.

There are about another 20 or so incidents like this, all in the span of 9 years, I think you get the picture. This is what a cursed place is like.

Quoting: Alpacalips

That sounds like ring 2 of the 7th circle of hell from Dante's Inferno:

Canto XIII

Ring 2: Against Self:

The second round of the seventh circle is the Wood of the Suicides, in which the souls of the people who attempted or died by suicide are transformed into gnarled, thorny trees and then fed upon by Harpies, hideous clawed birds with the faces of women; the trees are only permitted to speak when broken and bleeding. Dante breaks a twig off one of the trees and from the bleeding trunk hears the tale of Pietro della Vigna, a powerful minister of Emperor Frederick II until he fell out of favor and was imprisoned and blinded. He subsequently committed suicide; his presence here, rather than in the Ninth Circle, indicates that Dante believes that the accusations made against him were false.[70] The Harpies and the characteristics of the bleeding bushes are based on Book 3 of the Aeneid. According to Dorothy L. Sayers, Dante presents the sin of suicide as an "insult to the body; so, here, the shades are deprived of even the semblance of the human form. As they refused life, they remain fixed in a dead and withered sterility. They are the image of the self-hatred which dries up the very sap of energy and makes all life infertile." [70] The trees can also be interpreted as a metaphor for the state of mind in which suicide is committed.

Re: A Forest so evil, it's illegal to enter

I watched the video. I was a bit disappointed with claimed accounts. Not worthy of title.

My hypothesis of cause of insanity:

- Psilocybin fungi. Psilocybin is soluble in water. Shaded forest with little sunlight is fungi paradise. The water run-off across surface would have psilocybin compounds in it. All the people that lived within spooky forest drank from the local tributaries. No one would had used appropriate filtration to remove psilocybin or other unhealthy compounds.

Not convinced there was a "supernatural" cause.

Salutations.

True, there is a forest in Japan where people go for suicide but any forest will do. The idea is just to walk in and disappear. Animals will eat the carcass so bad that an autopsy will be impossible. It can't be determined if it was an accident or suicide.

Many Japanese tourists visit the Northwest Territories for the vast wilderness, northern lights etc. One year, a tourist disappeared. There was speculation that she had committed suicide. My son was working at the tourist info centre because he learned Japanese. He gave her pamphlets and stuff before she disappeared. She seemed normal. No suicide note. It could have just been a case of bad situational awareness. There are bears in the woods. You can get lost.
