To explain how to see the side of a person that they choose to hide and to see the true self, the window to the soul, we first need a bit of science.

We all have two brain hemispheres. A left brain and a right brain separated into two distinct cerebral hemispheres, connected by the corpus callosum. The two sides resemble each other and each hemisphere's structure is mostly mirrored by the other side. But despite the similarities, the functions of each hemisphere are different and in many ways unique.

the micro and macroscopic sides are represented in both hemispheres given enough time one hemisphere can take over for the other

"The right hemisphere of the brain is the Garden of Eden. It is Gods pleasant portion within where all people should be going, but very few go there because pastors have warned them about meditation that separates from thought.

Why have they warned about meditation that separates us from thought, because separating from thought separates you from them.

But Gods pleasant portion , the Garden of Eden which is the right hemisphere of the brain has become a wasteland because pastors have kept people away."

"IT'S ALL IN YOUR MIND

Using the bible and science we are arriving at very significant documentation that those things described in the Bible and experienced in life as sacred are actually things inside the human brain mind."

"And so we have been looking at the beginnings which come to us in the book of Genesis which is actually the Book of Genetics, the form and creation of all things."

Is there a way to do it even partially suggested in the video? If not, it's just waste of my time.

By the way - eyes are connected to optic chiasma by optic nerve. Beyond the optic chiasm, with crossed and uncrossed fibers, the optic nerves become optic tracts. The signals are passed on to the lateral geniculate body, in turn giving them to the occipital cortex (the outer matter of the rear brain).

Now, the only way to use the "inner eye" is to watch everything in stereo (crossed eye view or parallel eye view). When mastered to watch everything in stereo, you can switch the dominant eye. But I don't really know any real or important uses for this ability other than look into somebody eyes real long. (the method is, that the other one must look crossed eyes and the other as parallel)..

Basically you are connected and can intuitively know what the other one thinks. (test this by numbers)..

Maybe someone else remembers....he talked about a "toggle switch" which he said was located behind one of the ears and that by becoming conscious of, and then focusing on, a person can activate this switch and unlock the brain's hidden powers.....something like that.

Great article. I myself seem to be right brain dominant so my true self expresses itself on my right side of my face.

Brain synchronization is the way to go.

I have had success in deactivating the left brain through meditation techniques, the basics of which are on my book site, (link below). I describe the process as the most easiest thing to do, but also the most difficult. Because all you have to do is still the mind. Which after practice is quite easy. But to keep doing it... to have the discipline to keep it up, in the face of a world, systems, ways of life and people that are very left brained, is very difficult. But it does pay off. After stilling of the mind is accomplished, the mind finds a different way to 'think', and I believe it begins to think and 'be', through the right brain which opens up a godlike world and awareness, where you are at once, timeless. I have had much success in moving my awareness into the right brain. Not just for minutes or hours, but for years. The instructions on the webpage are mostly the same as in my book, so no real necessity in buying the book. I am not trying to plug it. Just thought this discussion was right up my ally.

Will.

Really funny. I just discovered this myself over the weekend. The guy's name is Neil Slade. He talks about a flip to switch to the frontal lobes instead of the back (reptile) part of the brain. (Not left/right, but front/back).

I was doing all kind of reading about this this weekend, reading all about the amygdala, the part of the brain that regulates emotions. (This is a deep and wonderful thing to research). And came upon discussions of the right/left brain. The one significant thing that caught my attention on this is how different the brains of females and males are in terms of hemispheres. But besides that, I thought it funny that the research seems to focus on left/right, when Neil Slade (and TDA Lingo) were focusing on front back.

yes...right and left, balance if possible is hard to find in this day and age of spiritual depravity. Still, one can balance one's activities to mimic right and left brain involvement.
