Do you guys want Astral/Etheric playgrounds?

I'm sure they can be built...

Better than the current ones.

What do you want?

And how will we fairly exchange value? Crypto sounds like a good path.

Right now, all loosh is restricted, cos nothing was offered in return, but that looks like its changing.

Glad you're back.

I'm fascinated how to spike our own natural DMT...

I don't want anything from you.

I'll build my own so I don't owe you anything.

playgrounds?

Ohhh dozen lol

The dreamscape astral is open to humanity . It shapes by who is viewing it. If you aren't finding a satisfactory environment, the problem isn't the astral, it's you :)

Re: Do you guys want Astral/Etheric playgrounds?

Paying artists, story tellers, and musicians for engineers to build new worlds to play in...

Game platforms could change that.

Some are wastelands, others are lifehouses...

"The music that's been written for the various incarnations of that project, most of which have failed, has always been of the highest quality," Townshend argued in a 1996 Ira Robbins interview. Insisting Lifehouse remained a "going concern," he added, "I think if I could get a story together that really worked that didn't feel dated – because of virtual reality as a subject having become rather passe – then I think Lifehouse would pay off."

Finally, by the late '90s, technology had almost caught up with Townshend's visions for the project, which now included a website where consumers could enter personal information that he'd use as the grist for new songs inspired by their lives and interests. The interactive possibilities at last allowed Townshend to experience the collaborative energy he'd hoped to tap into with Lifehouse in the early '70s.

"I haven't seen anyone do anything like this before," Townshend told the Guardian. "Have you ever had someone say, 'I've written you a song'? It's an extraordinary feeling. It immediately becomes significant and powerful – someone is responding to your essence. Some people might pretend not to be affected by it, but even the most hardened person – even if you said to Hannibal Lecter, 'Hannibal, dear, we've brought you your song' – would be interested."

Well I was thinking we may need an archetype or construct to locate and leave a mark if we can find it. Then report back here so that others may try. Needs to be something easy to get to.

If successful, it may grow and glp energy may pollute the astral in a more literal sense than it does today.
