How could a New Financial Network be Rapidly Deployed and Scaled?

How could a New Financial Network be Rapidly Deployed and Scaled?

25USD per hour to build and manage a duck farm.
30USD per hour to run a hydroponic barleygrass and veg farm.
20USD per hour to research and publicize atmospheric water technology.

Note: We are talking about a Parallel Financial Network here, not a System.

The Herb and Nutrition Worldwide Network built over the last thirty years was built alongside the current pharmaceutical system. The two run in parallel.

What's the difference between a Network and a System?

We're not intending to muscle in on the dying current financial system. We'll just build something alongside, check it works for 5-10 people, and then scale it.

Principles

- A New Financial Network would need to be built alongside the current network, and co-exist in harmony with it.

- It would need to accept any and all currencies at first. Crypto, lawful money, even the perfidious fiat.

- It would focus on getting people well-paid, regular work fixing their local area.

25USD per hour to build and manage a duk farm.
30USD per hour to run a hydroponic barleygrass and veg faracm.
20USD per hour to research and publicize atmospheric water technology.

- it would have to be free for everyone to use, but provide clear aims.

- It would need to work with pre-existing infrastructure. In order to scale rapidly, the Fork/Clone feature on Github and Codepen, and other version control sites, allows people to copy other people's projects rapidly.

- It would need to be open source, to allow for transparency, security, open code review, rapid scale, easy onboarding, reduced power struggles,

Ed Sheeran - I See Fire (Music Video)

- It would use #hashtags to advertize, organize, and provide partial proof-of-work-done. This allows you to work across varied infrastructure for little to no money. It also lets you provide public oversight without unwieldy, over-stuffed departments.

- It would be focused, primarily, on getting people well paid work which they enjoyed. Work that had an obvious positive effect on the local area.

- It would need to look good, and be easy to use.

- It would have an education component, and simple onboarding. Hopefully less than 15- to 60 minutes.

- The system would work first with fiat, second with lawful money, and third with crypto. Issuing a new currency would be to jarring to the markets.

~O~

Existing Systems Could be Re-Tuned or Re-Oriented

We are after pragmatism and speed here.

Anyone can build a perfectly working system in their mind.

But what about what we already have?

Paypal, Stripe, Kickstarter, StartSomeGood, Github, and Codepen could be stitched together just fine, to make a working version of the system. The only "downsides: are merchant and transaction feed.

- The upsides are many. good design, fast scaling and domain-specific expertise. This is easily worth the 5 to 10% cut they take. Our team has also found money transfer sites, and crowdfunding portals, that take little to no money.

Maybe,

I've heard of lots of talk about a 'new system' - but Im wary about a lot of what I hear.

I worry about Golden Manacles for humanity.

What currency is used is only about 20% of the issue, in my view. 40-50% of the total problem max.

How will the currency hit the streets? How will it be given/traded with the working-classes.... in return for what?

Will the transaction methods give Humanity Golden Wings, or Golden Manacles?

Re: How could a New Financial Network be Rapidly Deployed and Scaled?

Here is one disbursal mechanism that can be done with off-the-shelf systems, with virtually no customized software.

It works on this fundamental process;

Ask someone, in writing or face-to-face:

1) What is the next piece-of-equipment you need for your home and life?
2) What work will you offer in exchange for it?
3) How will you prove you completed the mission?

This could all be done openly on Github...

Re: How could a New Financial Network be Rapidly Deployed and Scaled?

EQUIPMENT: A dehumidifier for the house.
WORK EXCHANGE: I'll do 15 hours litter picking in my home-town in return.
PROOF:I'll post before and after videos of sites that I clean on youtube.

- All of this can be done on Github READMEs, with literally 5-10 minutes of onboarding. It takes 3 minutes to learn GFM Markdown.

- READMEs allow for genuine transparency, and public accountability.

- READMEs can be forked by others looking to launch similar projects in their home town. This key Github/Codepen feature allows for extremely rapid scaling, plus a degree of light oversight, as you may be able to see who forked a Repo.

[link to docs.github.com (secure)]

- Hashtags, Search and the Github API allow for results to be monitored in a manner that is coherent, but non-invasive.

Rapidly Deployed and Scaled?

Taking advantages of hashtags allows systems to be scaled, cohered and lightly monitored across multiple systems.

For example, the unique hashtags:

#BeautifulDanshui
#CleanDanshui
#Raising500USD
#StartADuckfarm
#PlantTreesKentucky
#KalkiNode
#NPrize
#BrainboxIsland

... instantaneously work across Tiktok, Youtube, Bitchute, Search Engines, forums.

Users could be told which sites are white-listed, to help the hashtag search team find results.

All you need is a hashtag search of ten whitelisted sites every 10 minutes, displayed with good design and CSS... this would be easy and inexpensive to set up.

Using hashtags allows for large-scale, low-budget, multi-site coherency and public accountability... without invasive, expensive, and unwieldy tracking systems.
